

In one of the most authentic interviews we've had, Dan gets vulnerable when talking about the tension that existed between him and his dad for many years. Dan's dad was a professional soldier who was stern and strict. When Dan was 13, his dad became a pastor and managed his church life much the same way. Dan talks about having to adjust to being a preacher's kid and how he developed resentment towards his dad and the church. When he was in his late twenties, Dan and his dad had a conversation while sitting in an airport. In that conversation, his dad told him he was proud of him. It was a moment Dan still cherishes. Today he and his dad have a good relationship and both have made some positive changes. Dan is a committed husband and father of three. He is much sought after as a speaker and trainer and is known for his authentic, "in the trenches" style of ministry.
