James is the father of five talented and ultra-successful adult children. We wanted to pick James' brain to figure out what a father can do to raise children who are kind, well-balanced, and well-respected. James gives us some great insights but it was clear that he simply sees himself as an average parent just doing the small things the right way. The interview gave us an opportunity to talk about generational blessings and how family values are passed down from one generation to the next. James' story will inspire parents in a special way.
